

VOLUME XVI, NUMBER 3, SUMMER 2016

CLAREMONT

REVIEW OF BOOKS

A Journal of Political Thought and Statesmanship

Michael Knox

Beran:
Brexit and
All That

Patrick J.
Garrity:
Henry
Kissinger

Linda
Bridges:
The Comma
Queen

Cheryl
Miller:
Jonathan
Franzen

Joseph
Epstein:
Isaiah
Berlin

Richard
Samuelson:
Hamilton
on Broadway

David P.
Goldman:
Flailing
Abroad

Mark
Bauerlein:
Queer
Theory

Douglas
Kries:
Augustine's
Confessions

Richard
Talbert &
Timothy W.
Caspar:
SPQR

A Publication of the Claremont Institute

PRICE: $6.95

IN CANADA: $8.95

from the editor's desk
Change-Makers

by Charles R. Kesler

Now that the democratic national convention is over, we can look forward, not necessarily in every sense of that term, to the campaign. The major Democrats have previewed their arguments for the fall, and we can at least steel ourselves for the upcoming exchanges.

For President Obama, the stakes are clear. As he told Politico recently, he wants his legacy to include “a 16-year era of progressive rule” that would upend the Reagan Revolution and fulfill his promise in 2008 to transform the country “fundamentally.” Obama’s own achievement, in other words, depends on eight years of a Hillary Clinton Administration, its agenda shoved further left by Bernie Sanders’s “political revolution.” Whether Obama likes it or not, if Change doesn’t continue, Hope will die, above all his hope of being the progressive Reagan.

In Philadelphia, therefore, he did his best to transfer his mandate to Hillary, always understanding that a charisma transfer was impossible. He hugged her long enough that images of Al Gore and Tipper in 2000 came to mind, or was that Michael hugging Fredo in The Godfather? Though Michelle and Barack were on their best behavior, the rivalry between the Obama and Clinton families is not so easily buried, as his icy praise of Hillary showed. “She’s been there for us [Americans],” he explained, “even if we haven’t always noticed.”

At his warmest, Obama still held something back. He declared, “there has never been a man or a woman more qualified than Hillary Clinton to serve as President of the United States....” The statement’s over-the-top absurdity (James Madison, phone home) left one waiting for the other shoe to drop, waiting to hear “and yet qualifications are no guarantee....”

Bill Clinton was nicer, but his rambling story of Life with Hill paid tribute both to her and to the mine fields in their long marriage. Take his charming first sentence, “In the spring of 1971, I met a girl.” A girl?! One thing Hillary in full ’70s feminist, Yale Law School mode would never have allowed herself to be called was a girl. She was a woman, if not Woman, and boy could she roar. But Bill couldn’t say he met a woman, because that was not unusual for him, and it might recall “that woman” with whom he did not have sexual relations.

So he settled for telling us about 45 years with “the best darn change-maker I have ever met in my entire life,” “the best mother in the whole world,” the woman “who has never been satisfied with the status quo in anything.” Despite constantly studying the issues, lining government reports, “always making things better,” Hillary, he admitted, can come off as earnest, “boring,” and, worse, an agent of the status quo. Bill took pains to deny the last point, at least. The Democrats face a tough question: if he can’t sell her, who can?

Hillary tried, but one thing this change-maker can’t change is herself. She brought up It Takes a Village, her 20-year-old book, and tried to explain it again in her acceptance speech. Her stumbling block remains the same: Americans don’t live in villages. She has friends in Greenwich Village, no doubt, but Americans live in small towns, suburbs, cities, but everywhere, until recently at least, in families. Her book confuses government with civil society in ways that invite the expansion of government into civil society—administering the affairs of families, churches, schools, and every other civil association.

Hillary’s latest formulation of this bad idea is “Stronger Together,” the theme of her speech and her campaign. Beyond its obvious value as a truism, her slogan raises the question why, for what purposes, do we want to be stronger together? So that we don’t have to “fear the future and fear each other,” she answered, which makes the Trumpian alternative sound like a return to the dystopia that Thomas Hobbes called the state of nature. But she was only getting started. Americans need to unify, she went on, so that we can achieve the full benefits of modern liberalism, from expanded welfare (including federally funded abortions) to new restrictions on “mean and divisive” political and private speech.

Yet “my fellow villagers” remains a hard sell. Mrs. Clinton’s best moments mocked Donald Trump, which is fine so long as he remains his own worst enemy. In the long, uncertain campaign ahead of us, however, the world may grow more dangerous, and he more formidable. Hobbes, who lived in a very dangerous world and loved to play cards, noted wryly that in the state of nature clubs are always trump.

Claremont Review of Books, Volume XVI, Number 3, Summer 2016. (Printed in the United States on August 3, 2016.)

Published quarterly by the Claremont Institute for the Study of Statesmanship and Political Philosophy, 1317 W. Foothill Blvd, Suite 120, Upland, CA 91786. Telephone: (909) 981-2200. Fax: (909) 981-1616. Postmaster send address changes to Claremont Review of Books Address Change, 1317 W. Foothill Blvd, Suite 120, Upland, CA 91786. Unsolicited manuscripts must be accompanied by a self-addressed, stamped envelope; or may be sent via email to: crbeditor@claremont.org.

Send all letters to the editor to the above addresses.

Editor: Charles R. Kesler

Senior Editors:

Christopher Flannery, William Voegeli

Managing Editor: John B. Kienker

Production Editor: Patrick Collins

Assistant Editor: Lindsay Eberhardt

Contributing Editor: Joseph Tartakovsky

Art Director: Elliott Banfield

Publisher: Michael Pack

Publisher (2000–2001): Thomas B. Silver

Price: $6.95 per copy; $27.80 for a one-year subscription; $55.60 for a two-year subscription; $83.40 for a three-year subscription. Add $17 for all foreign subscriptions, including those originating in Canada and Latin America. To subscribe, call (909) 981-2200, or contact subscriptions@claremont.org.

Visit us online at www.claremont.org/crb. Opinions expressed in signed articles do not necessarily represent the views of the editors, the Claremont Institute, or its board of directors. Nothing in this journal is an attempt to aid or hinder the passage of any bill or influence the election of any candidate. All contents Copyright © 2016 the Claremont Institute, except where otherwise noted.

W.F
B ,S
U ,CA

U ,CA